Now, after a 2011 production starring Michael Murphy, the theater has changed its policy and will be presenting a vampire-free "Dracula" from its season opener on Aug. 20. "Dracula," which was adapted by Bram Stoker from the 1897 novel "Dracula," was originally presented in 1897 and again in 1910, starring Hungarian actor Bela Lugosi, who became the model for Universal's vampire. "We had completed the script when the studio decided that there was not enough material to invest in a film," the production company, Castle Rock Entertainment, said in a statement at the time. "So, we decided to end the series." The 1996 movie "Bram Stoker's Dracula" in the U.S. was the last to feature Lugosi, who died before
