Loelia Harris Loelia Harris and her young family relocated to the Foothills from the Southern Suburbs this year. Since then she has been engaged in the school District and on the regional Body of Deacons, She loves being busy. Loelia is a strong advocate for girls in STEM, science, technology, engineering and mathematics- fields with a lot of room for growth in her area. She has had a long career in journalism but is looking to see what else there is to do in life. She hopes to focus on leadership, work with her family and help her young son explore his many interests. "Our church is the heart of our lives. It is where our son's elementary school is, where he is confirmed and where we are married. The Walsers are great people and continue to be an active part of our lives. It is where we met." Excerpt from the Book: There are no words to express how great it is to have a church family who loves you, hugs you, is never too busy to take time to pray for you, and is there when you need them the most. A church family is what makes life worth living. "Strong Church Families" is more than a hymn. We have often wondered about the church family and why we should continue to give, our time and talents, to a church we do not attend. We have prayed about this so much as we researched this book that we think other churches need to read it as well. This book is not intended to condemn non-members. Rather, it is written for the members of churches that are loved and appreciated. Our family attends several different churches. Some are members of our home church, however, we do not feel like we are family members with them. We believe all members of a church are family members. So, what is the difference? It is simple, at home, we are family. We share meals together e79caf774b

We are now in the 3D world where physical and digital are deeply intertwined and interconnected. No company is immune from this, and those that resist it are doomed. Note that these developments have been well underway for several decades, but only now is we seeing these forces coalesce in a significant way. The signs of this change are not subtle. Due to real estate development, we are beginning to see density first in the form of massive residential districts – like Hong Kong before it (not that we are so lucky, you just can't compare – Hong Kong has a lot less room for automobiles and, thus, congestion). There are also industrial conglomerates, like the Time Warner building, that generate their own energy needs and thus create massive synergy with their surroundings. As for digital, we are beginning to see more and more companies that have a deeply entrenched physical presence as well as digital companies like Google that have a physical business built around their digital services. Next, the partnership effect. These days it's harder for companies to know whom they are talking to in business terms without cooperation from the other side. For example, my business partners know, with whom I work best on any given project – they know that I am better at, say, creating graphics for the digital side of their products than I am at, say, writing copy for the physical retail environment. Our clients can see this as well, so they have a better idea of the problems that need to be solved. As a result, they are more comfortable working with us, and we are more comfortable working with them. The net result is that our companies work at a higher level than they would if we had to work alone. Next, the problem-solving environment. Being in a team and working in a system, in a partnership, and in a corporate structure that encourages collaboration and cooperation produces results. Yes, some of these benefits accrue from just working at a company – for example, the corporate structure encourages companies to develop and make use of best practices. However, when there is a strong partnership at work in a company, this is exacerbated. For example, let's say that the two companies do work to develop a robust collaboration structure to solve a problem. That problem solved, they keep that approach alive for
