Photos by the author Each month, the editors of the magazine Creativity choose someone to spotlight in "Photo Spotlight." The featured photographer varies from month to month. The photos were photographed on my Canon EOS 3, digital camera. The Canon EF 100mm macro lens was used to take the photos in the example section, but any lens could have been used. The lights used were mainly Nikon SB-800 flash units. In the example section, I took shots at four places: 1. At the lake 2. At the factory where the photos were shot 3. At the model's home 4. At my home ## Finding and Loading Photos Do you already have your photo files in the correct folder? Most likely, they are in the location where you took the photos. If your photos are organized in a folder, just go to the folder and open it. Photos can also be imported into the computer or digital camera via CDs or via the computer's file folder. But the first method is the best because any images placed on the CD or saved on the camera's memory card are backed up to the computer. Check that your images are in a folder that has the main Photoshop file name and that the images are the correct sizes, which is 1024 x 768 for most digital cameras. (The exact file sizes depend on your camera's settings.) Most of the files used in this book are AI, JPEG, or TIFFs. The images used in the example section in the previous section are JPGs.

Buried in a 107-page House-Senate budget conference report released Thursday is a provision to repeal a 19-year-old section of the tax code on capital gains in retirement accounts. The provision is one of a series of broadly written "technical corrections" contained in the conference report that will be used to offset other tax expenditures or initiatives with which lawmakers disagree. The provision is part of a controversial SEC Rule that allows anyone to place all their securities in a "qualified trust" to avoid paying capital gains taxes if the trust will hold the securities until the retiree's death. The Senate pushed the provision to repeal the capital gains tax in the final weeks of the negotiations, which began in earnest after Democrats seized the Senate in December. Senate Republicans, who already were opposed to repealing the SEC Rule, had left the door open to a deal on the capital gains issue. But few other elements of the tax code were left on the table after a 10-month stalemate between the two parties over taxes. The Senate had tacked an amendment onto the budget conference report with the provision that would repeal the capital gains tax. The House had a separate bill with the provision, but Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-Ky.) chose to include the change in the conference report. The provision is likely to be added to the final tax bill, a senior Senate Republican aide said. The aide said that Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) wants to vote on the "technical corrections" in early January. The House has already passed its version of the bill and is expected to do so shortly. The budget conference will be the final step in the tax reform debate. The Senate and House have passed their versions of the bill, which is now going to the conference committee to iron out differences between the two chambers. Both houses plan to vote to approve the conference report in coming weeks, after which the proposal will be brought to President Barack Obama. The details of the conference committee's procedure will be released at a press conference Thursday afternoon. The Senate provision to repeal the capital gains tax cut is more than 3,000 words long and includes 10 pages of text on how the tax would be phased out over a 10-year period beginning in 2011. It also includes a lengthy list of consequences for implementing the tax repeal, many of which are not yet fully understood or worked out as the legislation goes through the Senate's legislative process.
