Roblox is an online game platform and game creation system developed by Roblox Corporation that allows users to program games and play games created by other users. Created by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel in 2004 and released in 2006, the platform hosts user-created games of multiple genres coded in the programming language Lua. For most of Roblox's history, it was relatively small, both as a platform and a company. Roblox began to grow rapidly in the second half of the 2010s, and this growth has been accelerated by the COVID-19 pandemic. Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through a virtual currency called Robux. As of August 2020, Roblox had over 164 million monthly active users, including more than half of all American children under 16. Although Roblox has received generally positive reviews from critics, it has faced criticism for its moderation, microtransactions, and exploitative practices directed toward children. Coding competitions of all types were popping up all over the world. In the UK alone, we saw the completion of the London 2012 Olympics and a series of coding competitions that focussed on building apps to help the organisers of the Olympics. These Olympic apps were built in under 24 hours. We even caught a glimpse at the manipulation that goes on behind the scenes with the sites which have what seem to be very easy points of entry but then you end up with a ranking that isn't quite what it first appears. The discussion ranged into other categories and what we can learn from other coding competitions. The presentations ranged from the time of completion of the app to the company behind the app. Competing and joining the Olympics was a very different experience. We were able to learn some very interesting things that were not only useful for us and our various projects, but located in many different parts of the world, so we can now take what we've learnt and apply it. Topics covered in this meetup included:-
