This is needed to enable something called address space layout randomization, which makes it harder to write a malicious program. The most prominent example of this is the stack protector, which is only enabled on x86_64 and amd64 platform. I'm not entirely familiar with how x32 works, but I imagine it is very similar. Members of the Los Angeles Police Department SWAT team responded to the Westlake Hollywood Apartment Complex at 9030 W. Sunset Blvd. shortly after 8 p.m. in response to reports of shots fired. One man was found dead inside an apartment in the second floor hallway area. Police said it appeared the suspect fired the shots from a .22 caliber handgun. No other victims were reported by police. The suspect was described as a man in his 30s with a medium build wearing dark colored clothing. Nearby residents said they thought the loud noises they heard were firecrackers. KTLA's Matt Phillips contributed to this story. 34.138631 -118.064147Several systems have been proposed for high speed selective data communication. Both wired and wireless networks have been built to facilitate the exchange of information. Most of such networks, however, are bandwidth constrained. Consequently, the network must be oversubscribed to facilitate the exchange of information. Various researchers have investigated wireless communications for such applications. Wireless networks have a number of advantages over wired networks in many applications. Nevertheless, many of the
