It is available as tablets, liquids, granules, capsules, and effervescent tabs. It is used for its analgesic effects mainly in the pain and fever of colds, flu, and arthritis. Advil is also used to treat other conditions such as nausea, vomiting, and joint pain. Advil offers good pain relief but it may have side effects. Side Effects of Advil The most common side effects of Advil are mild gastrointestinal side effects such as upset stomach, constipation, diarrhea, vomiting, and gas. Other side effects include headache, skin reaction, joint pain, tiredness, weakness, heartburn, dizziness, chest pain, blurred vision, difficulty sleeping, and fatigue. Overall, the side effects of Advil are minimal and most people tolerate the drug well. However, if you are taking high doses of Advil over a long period of time or if you start taking Advil as a treatment for a severe or uncontrolled condition, tell your doctor right away. Side effects that require immediate medical attention may be mild or severe. Serious side effects of Advil include blood clots (thrombosis), bleeding, and liver damage. The above information is based on data obtained directly from traditional Chinese medicine textbooks and peer-reviewed
