Evernote: Web 2.0 Video - sama ===== grellas The essential message of this video could not be expressed any more simply or convincingly: " This is not an ordinary software company. We are a not-for-profit, we don't care what your status is, we don't care what your sales are, we don't care about your revenues." One of the most valuable pieces of wisdom for entrepreneurs to internalize, given the market dynamics of Web 2.0 and beyond. It is a mantra that should be repeated on a daily basis by every entrepreneur, regardless of size. Evernote has an excellent business model that is based on highly efficient technology that is very simple to use. Its competitive positioning is strong and it is still growing. It is an unguestionable success and while its $200m in VC capital is a ridiculously high figure (based on a valuation of $5bn), it is one that does not change the company's long-term prospects. If anyone has any doubts about this company, I would strongly recommend seeing this video, especially if you are considering the premise that the best way to build a successful company is to be focused on customer acquisition. Best of luck to Evernote as it builds a major new presence on the Web in the coming months. This is one of the most important Web 2.0 companies to watch for the future. Phylogeny and natural history of parasites of the squirrel monkey in Yucatán state, Mexico. A sample of the squirrel monkey (Saimiri sciureus) was collected from the Yucatán state (Mexico) to determine the presence and prevalence of two species of haemoparasites, Haemoproteus and Leucocytozoon, and eight species of endoparasites, namely, Trichuris, Ascaris, Troglostrongylus, Strongyloides, Metastrongylus, Capillaria, Strongylopus, and Atractocephalus. Blood samples were taken from 611 individuals at the time of trapping
