WASHINGTON – Thousands of people marched in the streets on the National Mall Thursday to demand that President Obama sign the nuclear agreement with Iran that the White House is reviewing. A plurality of Americans say the nuclear deal should be rejected, and they are more inclined to blame Obama than to approve the deal, according to a poll published Wednesday by the Washington Post and ABC News. Obama’s proposal to Congress to accept the deal was met with a shrug by Americans concerned about Iran’s ambition in the region. “He’s doing what he said he would do,” said Marcy Flesch, a restaurant manager who was on vacation in Virginia. RELATED: Startling poll results for political junkies Asked if Congress should reject the deal if Iran violated it, 50 percent of respondents said no. But that view was based largely on the idea that the violation would not be a significant event. Only 12 percent said yes to that. While 51 percent said Congress should reject the deal if it was proven Iran was hiding a stockpile of nuclear materials, most, 37 percent, said it would not matter to them. Overall, 48 percent said they thought the deal should not be enacted, compared with 48 percent who believed it should. About 1,000 marchers passed the Capitol and arrived at the White House shortly after noon, where they were to deliver a letter from more than a million people urging Obama to reject the deal. After the march, protesters held a rally on the National Mall, where they chanted ♦ 6d1f23a050
