General Sir Nick Carter said it would "probably not" be possible for President Donald Trump to cancel the deal, as the UK would have to send military planes to maintain the vital flow of air traffic over international airspace. The remarks come as Trump is set to decide whether or not to decide to pull the US out of the deal within the next three to four months. Former officials within the Obama administration have previously stated that the president is set to pull out. However, if the US pulls out it will face the possibility of being sanctioned by the US as well as being labelled as a "pariah state" by the UN. Should the US pull out, the only real remaining option for the US would be to continue along the path
